ing away from the front were left in flames as a result of bombing and strafing attacks.

After smashing beyond captured Polotsk, one Russian column struck to within less than 35 miles of the Dvinsk-Warsaw railroad.

A number of Red Army sector commanders reported that the German line has virtually vanished and that the Soviet ground staff, leap-frogging to airdromes, is finding it difficult to race ahead of Russian tank units.

The spearhead of Soviet tank forces west of Minsk were reported catching up with fleeing German transport, grinding the enemy to pieces under their caterpillars.

Huns Frightened

Some German prisoners were quoted as saying the Russian offensive is "as big as a tidal wave" and declaring that there is "no good in firing into it."

Numerous bedraggled Germans continue to emerge from the woods of White Russia to surrender.

The army newspaper Red Star said that east of Baranovich the Germans are counter-attacking fiercely with tanks and infantry. Southeast of Baranovich the Russians energetically developed their pursuit of the Nazis.

Moving forward in some sectors as much as 27 miles in a single day, the Red Army overran upwards of 800 towns and villages yesterday. In their sweep, the Russians encircled and routed fleeing German contingents, inflicting heavy casualties and seizing huge quantities of war materials and many prisoners.

Already one Red Army column was more than 45 miles beyond fallen Polotsk, which Premier Marshal Joseph Stalin announced was "carried by assault" after violent street fighting.

Polotsk, described officially as a "powerful fortified area of German defenses in the direction of Dvinsk," cost the enemy heavily in men and equipment, an official communiqué said.

The town had been extremely well fortified, its approaches being guarded by a deeply-echeloned defense zone known as the "Tiger Line." Inside the community proper many stone buildings had been converted into permanent firing points.

After crushing the "Tiger Line," the Russian tanks and infantry stormed into the streets of Polotsk.

pool at least until the end of the harvesting season.

Draft officials told WFA that local selective service boards are "hesitant" to induct farm workers at this time of the year.

"They don't expect many farm men to be called up before the end of the agricultural season," one WFA spokesman declared.

Approximately 600,000 of the deferred farm workers are under 26 years of age, selective service figures indicate.

As of the first of July, 81,300 foreign workers—including 57,000 Mexicans, 17,000 Jamaicans, 5,500 Bahamians, 900 Barbadians and 900 Newfoundlanders—were under contract with the WFA and employed on U. S. farms.

WFA officials, meantime, anticipate "difficulty" in securing the 700,000 city workers on a month-to-month basis. They reported, however, that state agricultural extension services reported 625,000 replacements through 12,000 county and farm labor placement offices in the five months since February 14, 1944, in the government's attempt to spread out farm workers in critical areas.

Five Nip Ships Sunk In Daring Attack Only 550 Miles From Tokyo

craft was extensively employed at both objectives," said the communiqué. "Harbor installations and warehouses at Haha Jima were set afire by bombs, rockets and machine gun fire."

The attack on Iwo Jima, approximately 660 nautical miles southeast of Yokohama, was executed Monday, following up a previous assault delivered Sunday by carrier planes.

Vast Operation

Monday's vast operation of the fast striking carrier group expanded in two ways in that Iwo Jima was brought under attack from both the air and sea, while the carrier airmen soared farther northward to hammer Haha Jima.

The blasting of enemy facilities on Iwo Jima by destroyers and cruisers marked the closest approach to date by central Pacific naval forces to the Japanese homeland.

Admiral Nimitz' communiqué did not mention any attempt by surface craft of the imperial Japanese navy to come to grips with the striking United States task force. It did reveal, however, that air resistance was present over both target areas.

Among the five Jap ships sunk were a large cargo vessel and medium oiler.

The fact that 25 enemy planes were knocked out of the skies over both islands, plus the disclosure that an undetermined number of other Jap aircraft was wrecked on the ground could indicate that enemy air opposition was lighter than was encountered during Sunday's air strike against Iwo Jima.

Shoot Down Japs

American airmen, during the initial attack Sunday, shot down 39 Jap planes, probably destroyed 16 more in the air and demolished or damaged at least 24 others on the ground. Jap bombers based on Iwo Jima were believed to have been used for attacks on American positions on Saipan island in the Marianas.

The fierce battle for Saipan continued with U. S. Marines and army troops striking out from captured Garapan and Tanapag after bottling up at least 13,000 Japs in a narrow neck about five miles long, on the northern part of the island.

The Japs abandoned Garapan, the island's capital town, in the face of the determined American advance. United States planes bombed and strafed them as they fled, preceded by thousands of Jap civilians who left the city as the roar of American guns became audible. Garapan had a peacetime population of 10,000.

Seizure of Garapan and Tanapag represented the greatest single gain the Americans have made on 13-mile-long Saipan island. It extended Jap lines from Tanapag, on the west coast, around the mountain village of Atchugan, in the center. The lines were anchored on the east coast, within four miles of Inagaga point, on the northeast tip of the island.

A small Jap force, attempting infiltration of American lines Sunday night and early Monday morning, was wiped out without loss to the Americans.

would make it impossible to unseat it. The convention would, he said, be put in the position of overriding a court.

The Democratic harmony advocates believe that there is a chance for reversal of the anti-New Deal attitude in a second Texas convention in September. They also are optimistic over chances of a reversal in Mississippi, and of stemming a revolt in South Carolina.

Seating of the Texas and Mississippi delegations would destroy chances of a 100 percent "draft" for Mr. Roosevelt. The Texas delegation is expected to support either James A. Farley or Sen. Harry F. Byrd, of Virginia, for the presidential nomination.

stand it, as the only way of reaching a complete solution of the problem that may be presented to us."

The war department explained that the officers are serving under a contract with the Argentine government which was negotiated in June, 1943, for a two-year period.

The ranking officer of the group is Col. Kenneth A. Cavenah. The other two officers have been sent to Buenos Aires within the last few months, after the Farrell regime came into power.

In the state department, it was pointed out that some advantage is gained in having American officers serve in this capacity rather than officers of another nation. It was acknowledged, however, that Argentina would have difficulty finding aviation instructors available from any other nation at this time.

BENITO'S WIFE FORESAW FALL

began sending the Germans reeling backward toward Rome and Northern Italy.

Sizing up the situation with feminine intuition, Mrs. Mussolini without saying a word to her husband Benito gave the word to get rid of the furniture, some of which, it is reported, belonged to the prince.

Several industrialists and tradesmen who were interested in buying the furniture were invited to the villa and deals were made.

Mussolini became cross when he learned his portly wife had disposed of the furniture without his knowledge. Apparently Benito heard complaints that some of the prince's furniture were sold at the same time, too.

With the typical directness of a dictator, Mussolini ordered that the police should regain the sold furniture. By now Mussolini was aware that the military situation was becoming hopeless as far as the Germans holding Rome was concerned, and he gave instructions that the furniture should be sent to him in northern Italy, his new refuge.

Mussolini's hideaway in northern Italy was a villa on Garda Lake, where now, a broken man, he is living in seclusion.

Police Inspector Beniamino Roselli and Inspector De Simone were commissioned to retrieve the furniture. It was a rather difficult job.

They did the job in a rather abrupt manner. They put into prison those who had bought the furniture.

For instance, a well-known Rome tailor who had purchased Mussolini's writing desk and books for 30,000 lire ($300), was kept in prison for a fortnight before the two police officials could be persuaded to admit that his buying of the furniture was on the level and that his receipts were in good order.

It was with the greatest difficulty that the tailor obtained his freedom and got back his $300.

A Rome tradesman who had purchased two of Mussolini's modern radio sets was also clamped in jail. His crime, apparently, was that he had re-sold the radios. He was retained in prison for several weeks.

To add to the comedy of errors, Inspector De Simone was put in the clink himself because he allegedly grafted a "take" in the transactions by pretending he had to pay more buying back the furniture than he really paid.

It is not yet known whether all the furniture that was once Mussolini's has been sent up north to him or how much has been hidden away by the retrievers.

Mrs. Mussolini is now with her husband at Garda Lake. Their eldest daughter, Edda, Countess Galeazzo Ciano, is in Switzerland with her children. Ciano, formerly Italy's foreign minister, was executed about four months ago for having voted no-confidence in his father-in-law. He voted against Mussolini in the grand council of Fascists sitting July 24, 1943, on the issue of restoring King Victor Emmanuel to his constitutional right to direct Italy's fortunes of war.

With Mr. and Mrs. Mussolini at Garda Lake are believed to be their two sons, Romano, 12, and Vittorio, who is about 30 and who used to be an Italian aviation officer. Vittorio, they now say, is dabbling in the film business, being proprietor of a company known as A.C.I.

Yanks Advance

Overcoming stubborn Nazi resistance, American forces in Normandy smashed to within one mile north of La Haye and took up positions approximately two miles west of the town. An all-out assault on the strategic communications center was anticipated momentarily.

Heavy fighting was in progress to the east, a half-mile south-southeast of St. Jores which previously was occupied.

Heavy rains and muddy terrain slowed down the Yank advance southwest of Carentan, but did not stop it completely. Here the U. S. troops gained another half-mile.

Around Caen, at the eastern end of the Normandy front, British and Canadian tank and infantry forces were engaged in fierce fighting in the streets of Carpiquet, near the outskirts of the Caen rail center.

Eighth Moves Up

In Italy, British Eighth Army spearheads converged upon the Arezzo communications hub, reaching points only five miles to the south. American advance elements were encountering stiff enemy resistance at Rosignano, 11 miles south of the Tyrrhenian port of Livorno.

Strong formations of Allied bombers and fighters went into action over Northern France again today after heavyweight night bombers blasted railway objectives, German troop concentrations and robot bomb launching sites.

Speedy British mosquitoes at the same time attacked a synthetic oil plant in the industrial Ruhr while other bomber command craft mined German-control waters.

Southern England was again harassed during the night by German robot bombs and the British anxiously awaited a promised statement by Prime Minister Winston Churchill tomorrow on measures to cope with the menace.

PLANNING THE PEACE

THERE are many indications of a German crack-up. It may not come this month or this summer, but it cannot be very long delayed. The Nazis are now assailed powerfully on three fronts—Italy, Normandy and Russia—of which the last is most powerful. There is also what might be called a fourth front—the never-ending assault from the Allied air forces.

The imminence of Nazi collapse arouses many problems which should be studied by civilians no less than by experts. What is to be done with the Germans this time when they have surrendered? They will be disarmed and rendered incapable of harm for many years to come—that may be assumed. But what of penalties for the vast damage they have inflicted on a civilized world? What of amends and restoration? What shall be the nature of the controls imposed? Then the Japanese—what is to be done with them? and what rules and penalties shall be adopted by the civilized world to guarantee general peace hereafter?

The military men are winning the war, and the statesmen are busily engaged in shaping the ensuing peace, but neither of these groups can solve the problem alone. It is time for mass-thinking everywhere by intelligent men and women.

TWENTY-FOUR-HOUR WEEK

A work week of only 24 hours is envisioned by Gustave Dahlberg, manufacturer of insulating and building materials. He developed this idea the other day to the American Society of Planning Officials, and expects to repeat it at a Senate hearing later.

The leisure involved in working only eight hours, three days a week, means, according to Dahlberg, more time at home, with consequent demands for better housing. This in turn would boom the building industry and American business generally.

A 24-hour week seems remote just now, when the common 40-hour week has been stepped up to 48, and overtime work is usual. Even when the war ends, it will not come all at once, if ever. A great deal of concentrated production would be a prerequisite and a necessary concomitant. Still, our ancestors would never have expected the world to see anything short of a 12-hour day. You never can tell.

What is so conventional as a political convention?

The WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

By DREW PEARSON

WASHINGTON—It hasn't leaked out yet, but hard-working Chester Bowles, the man who made OPA as popular as it could be, has written a letter to the White House asking the President to relieve him of his job.

He has told FDR that Connecticut political leaders have offered him the Democratic nomination for Governor and that he has to give them a decision within the next 30 days.

Bowles, in his usual tactful manner, also laid down some tough conditions for the President to take if he remains on at the head of the OPA. He specified that he would continue on the job only if he was put in charge of all demobilization after the war including the thorny post of disposing of surplus materials.

The President, who likes the job Bowles has done, probably would be delighted to pass demobilization on to him. However, Justice Jimmy Byrnes has put his close friend Will Clayton in this key post and wants to keep him.

Not long ago when Clayton tendered his resignation over the Texas political rebellion and the part his Texas business associates played in it, Justice Byrnes flatly refused to accept it.

With more tact than Leon Henderson and almost as much courage Bowles has held the price line pretty well and made people understand—if not like—rationing.

BLUE GRASS PROTECTRESS

The part which the vivacious first lady of the state is playing in the affairs of the state is causing more and more political gossip in the Blue Grass country.

The other day distinguished Congressman John Robinson, long the one leading Republican from Kentucky, visited new Republican Governor Simeon Willis with a group of other Republicans. Graciously, Mrs. Willis invited them for dinner, sat with them during a delicious repast.

But after dinner, when the men usually are left to their cigars and bourbon, Mrs. Willis lingered on.

Glances were cast in her direction. Feet shifted. The visiting GOP leaders had intimate political matters to discuss, and were accustomed to talking without ladies present.

Finally Governor Willis' secretary, Ralph Homan, decided to be tactful. He rose and said to the first lady:

"Mrs. Willis, I guess it's about time for you and me to leave so these gentlemen can get down to business."

"You can leave if you want to Ralph," she said, "but I'm going to stay and protect Sim."

SMOKE-FILLED MANEUVERING

Wounds now appear pretty well healed between the Dewey-Bricker camps, but for a time at Chicago those who saw what went on behind the scenes thought that clashing views and personalities never would be reconciled.

It is, of course, nothing new for Presidential and Vice-Presidential candidates to row. Willkie and his running mate, the late Senator McNary, never got enthusiastic about each other. Roosevelt and Garner frequently were at swords' points. Coolidge and Dawes were almost openly bitter, while Hoover and Charlie Curtis

DIET AND HEALTH

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M.D.

MEDICAL advance does not consist in such an event as a great scientific discovery and its application to a hitherto unqueried disease. There are little skirmishes as well as great battles won against the enemy and sometimes a succession of these little advancements is made in one field over a long period of time so that when the smoke lifts for a moment we find we have really accomplished much more than we supposed.

A very good example of this kind of advance is that made in the field of varicose veins. As I look back at the time when I was an interne in a Chicago hospital in 1907 and 1908 and remember how the varicose vein cases were handled, I cannot but be astonished at the difference between then and now and the greatly improved results now.

One of the troubles the varicose vein patient had in the old days was that he couldn't get anybody to think his troubles were real or serious. They were called a minor malady. Well, they were minor to everybody but himself. Then in the old days the surgeons didn't have much faith in their treatments themselves. The patient had to submit to a quite extensive and complicated piece of surgery and over half the time after two or three months of invalidism he was no better off than he was before.

Sclerosing Veins

Now after making little improvements here and little advances there the whole problem has cleared up so that his physician can really promise the varicose vein patient something definite and without any long period in bed either. This comes down essentially to the discovery of practical methods of sclerosing veins.

An illustration may help us to understand the real difficulty about varicose veins. Whoever has gasoline enough nowadays and takes even a short drive along streets left neglected in wartime has the picture before him. He wants to go to Jones hardware store. All right he used to drive down Chestnut Street. But nowadays the surface of Chestnut Street is full of holes and rough spots on the surface, and he has to go slowly. He learns to make little detours and he gets to Jones' all right by going along Maple Street.

Well, the veins are merely highways and every blood corpuscle is a kind of motor car. In the course of time the inside of the main vein along the leg—Chestnut Street—gets rough and traffic is slowed up. Then the valves in the main vein break down. The blood could get up the leg by going along the other veins—called collateral circulation in doctor's language—and these other veins not having been subjected to as much traffic are still in good repair. But the blood not being endowed with sentient judgment can't choose the sensible course, so it goes up the old main highway because hydraulic pressure pushes it into that channel.

Solution Injected

The only way to stop it is to close the highway. And that is what sclerosing the veins does, and that is what the modern treatment of varicose veins is. The sclerosing is done with a solution injected into the vein which completely destroys the lining and makes the vein shrivel and grow into a fibrous cord.

The little by little improvements that have been made in this procedure consist mostly in devising of better and better and less and less painful and dangerous sclerosing agents. During recent years organic soapy solutions have almost entirely replaced other sclerosing agents in the treatment of varicose veins.

Possibly the greatest help in the application of these newer methods from the patient's standpoint is that he doesn't have to go to bed. The tests to determine whether a given case is suitable for injection treatments and also the treatments themselves are given in the doctor's office and do not interrupt the patient's work.

The small superficial varicosities that occur mostly in women who have borne children do not need treatment imperatively, but can be sclerosed if desired for cosmetic purposes.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Q. My girl three and a half years old is so stubborn that no punishment will make her do what she does not want to do.

A. Why use punishment at this age to get her to do what you want her to do? Limit punishment to keeping her from doing a few things she must never do. This distinction is given quite at length in my bulletin, "Stubbornness," to be had by writing me in care of this paper enclosing a self-addressed envelope with a three-cent stamp on it.

"CALAMITY TOWN" by ELLERY QUEEN

CHAPTER FORTY

"Rosemary was meant to be murdered," repeated Pat slowly, as if the words were in a language she didn't understand.

"But Queen—" protested Bradford. "I know, I know," sighed Ellery. "It raises tremendous difficulties and objections. But with Nora eliminated as the intended victim, it's the only logical explanation for the crime. So we've got to accept it as our new premise. Rosemary was meant to be murdered. Immediately I asked myself: Did the three letters have anything to do with Rosemary's death?"

"Superficially, no. The letters referred to the death of Jim's wife—"

"And Rosemary was Jim's sister," said Pat with a frown.

"Yes, and besides, Rosemary had shown no signs of the illnesses predicted for Thanksgiving Day and Christmas Day. Moreover, since the three letters can now be interpreted as two or three years old or more, they no longer appear necessarily criminal. They can merely refer to the natural death of a previous wife of Jim's—not Nora, but a first wife whom Jim married in New York and who died there some New Year's Day between the time Jim ran out on Nora and the time he came back to marry her."

"But Jim never said anything about a first wife," objected Pat.

"That wouldn't prove he hadn't had one," said Cart.

"No," nodded Ellery. "So it all might have been perfectly innocent. Except for two highly significant and suspicious factors: first, that the letters were written but never mailed, as if no death had occurred in New York; and second, that a woman did actually die in Wrightsville on New Year's Day of 1941, as written by Jim in his third and last letter a long time before it happened. Coincidence?"

"No, I saw that there must be some connection between Rosemary's death and the three letters Jim wrote."

Ellery paused a second or two before posing this problem: "What connection is possible between Rosemary Haight's death and the three letters Jim Haight wrote long, long before?"

"And with this question, we come to the heart of the problem. For with Rosemary the intended victim all along, the use of the three letters can be interpreted as a blind, a clever deception, a psychological smoke-screen to conceal the truth from the authorities! Isn't that what happened?"

"Didn't you and Chief Dakin, Bradford, instantly dismiss Rosemary's death as a factor and concentrate on Nora as the intended victim? But that was just what Rosemary's murderer would want you to do! You ignored the actual victim to look for murder motives against the ostensible victim. And so you built your case around Jim, who was the only person who could possibly have poisoned Nora, and never for an instant sought the real criminal—the person with the motive and opportunity to poison Rosemary."

Pat was by now so bewildered that she gave herself up wholly to listening. But Carter Bradford was following with a savage intentness, hunched over the table and never taking his eyes from Ellery's face. "Go on!" he said. "Go on!"

"Let's go back," said Mr. Queen, lighting a cigarette. "We now know Jim's three letters referred to a hidden, a never-mentioned first wife. If this woman died on New Year's Day two or three years ago, why didn't Jim mail the letters to his sister? More important than that, why didn't he disclose the fact to you or Chief Dakin when he was arrested? Why didn't Jim tell Judge Martin, his attorney, that the letters didn't mean Nora, for use as a possible defense in his trial? For if the first wife were dead, it would have been a simple matter to corroborate the attending physician's affidavit, the death certificate, a dozen things."

"But Jim kept his mouth shut. He didn't by so much as a word indicate that he'd married another woman between the time he and Nora broke up almost four years ago and the time he returned to Wrightsville to marry her. Why? Why Jim's mysterious silence on this point?"

"Maybe," said Pat with a shiver, "because he'd actually planned and carried out the murder of his first wife."

"Then why didn't he mail the letters to his sister?" argued Cart. "Since he'd presumably written them for that eventuality?"

"Ah," said Mr. Queen. "The very counterpoint? So I said to myself: Is it possible that the murder Jim had planned of his first wife did not take place at the time it was supposed to?"

"You mean she was alive when Jim came back to Wrightsville?" gasped Pat.

"Not merely alive," said Mr. Queen; he slowly ground out the butt of his cigarette in an ash tray. "She followed Jim here."

"The first wife?" Carter gasped. "She came to Wrightsville?"

"Yes, but not as Jim's first wife."

"Then who?"

"She came to Wrightsville," said Ellery, "as Jim's sister."

"As Jim's sister?" whispered Pat. "The woman Jim introduced to us as his sister Rosemary wasn't his sister at all? She was his wife?"

"Yes," Ellery motioned to Gus Olesen. But Gus had the second round ready. And no one spoke until Gus returned to the bar.

"But Queen," queried Carter, dazed, "how can you know that?"

"Well, those words were what the woman who called herself Rosemary Haight was Jim Haight's sister," demanded Ellery. "Only the word of Jim and Rosemary, and that's both dead. . . . However, that's not how I know that because I know who really killed her. And knowing who really killed her, it just isn't possible for Rosemary to have been Jim's sister. The only person she could have been, the only person against whom the murderer had motive, was Jim's first wife; as you'll see."

"But Ellery," said Pat, "didn't you tell me yourself that day, by comparing the woman's handwriting on the trucking receipt with the handwriting on the flap of the letter Jim received from 'Rosemary Haight,' that that proved the woman was Jim's sister?"

"I was wrong," said Mr. Queen, frowning. "All that the two signatures proved, really, was that the same woman had written both. That meant only that the woman who showed up here was the same woman who wrote Jim that letter which disturbed him so. I was misled by the fact that on the envelope she had signed the name 'Rosemary Haight.' Well, she was just using that name."

"But if the woman who was poisoned was Jim's first wife," protested Carter, "why didn't Jim's real sister come forward after the murder? Lord knows the case had enough publicity!"

"If he had a sister," mumbled Patty. "If he had one!"

"Oh, he had a sister," said Ellery wearily. "Otherwise, why should he have written those letters to one? When he originally penned them, in planning the murder of his then-wife—the murder he didn't pull off—he expected those letters to give him an appearance of innocence. He expected to send them to his real sister, Rosemary Haight. It would have to be a genuine sister to stand the searchlight of a murder investigation, or he'd really be in a mess. So Jim had a sister, all right."

"But the papers!" said Pat. "Cart's right, Ellery! The papers were full of news about 'Rosemary Haight, sister of James Haight,' and how she died here in Wrightsville. If Jim had a real sister Rosemary, surely she'd have come to Wrightsville to expose the mistake?"

"Not necessarily. But the fact is—Jim's sister did come to Wrightsville, Patty. Whether she came to expose the mistake I can't say; but certainly, after she'd had a talk with her brother Jim, she decided to say nothing about her true identity. I suppose Jim made her promise to keep quiet. And she's kept that promise."

"I don't follow," said Cart irritably. "You mean the real Rosemary Haight's been in Wrightsville all these months, calling herself by some other name?"

Mr. Queen shrugged. "Who helped Jim in his trouble? The Wright family, a small group of old friends, myself, and . . . one other person."

"Robert!" gasped Pat. "Robert Roberts, the newspaper woman?"

"The only outsider of the sex that fits," nodded Ellery. "Yes, Robert Roberts. Who else? She believed in Jim's innocence from the start. She fought for him, she sacrificed her job for him, and she ended—in desperation—she provided the car by which Jim escaped his guards at the cemetery. Yes, Robert's the only one who could be Jim's sister, from the facts; it explains all the peculiarities of her conduct. I suppose 'Robert Roberts' has been her professional name for years. But her real name is Rosemary Haight!"

"So that's why she cried so at Jim's funeral," said Pat softly.

"It gets clearer," admitted Cart at last. "But what I don't understand is why Jim's first wife came to Wrightsville calling herself Jim's sister."

"And why," added Pat, "Jim permitted the deception?"

"Well, let's think it out," suggested Ellery. "Consider these points: Jim left almost four years ago on the eve of his wedding to Nora, as a result of their quarrel about the house. He went to New York. I should suppose, desperately unhappy. But remember Jim's character. An iron streak of independence—that's usually from the same lode as stubbornness and pride. That kept him from writing to Nora, from coming back to Wrightsville."

"Back in New York, Jim ran into this woman. We all saw something of her—a sultry, seductive siren . . . especially attractive to a man licking the wounds of an unhappy love affair. On the rebound, this woman hooked Jim. They must have been miserable together. Jim was a good solid boy, and the woman was capable of driving a man quite mad with exasperation. She must have made his life intolerable, because Jim wasn't the killer type and still he did finally plan to kill her. The fact that he planned each detail of her murder so carefully, even to writing those letters to his sister in advance—a silly thing to do!—shows how obsessed he became with the necessity of being rid of her."

WASHINGTON Report

A WAC Writes Letter
To Columnist Mother

Tells of Pacific Trip
And Dangers of the Sea

By HELEN ESSARY
Central Press Columnist

WASHINGTON—I hope she won't be too cross with me for giving you her letter. It will help the cause nearest her heart—WAC recruiting. And, besides, I promise never to do it again. The letter came when I was half sick with worry and regret that I had let my young daughter go off alone into an unknown world.

Here is some of what she wrote me:

"Dearest Mother: Well, I'm finally on dry land but still remember the rocking rhythm of the ship. I am temporarily in the New Hebrides Islands." (Motherly query—where in the universe are the New Hebrides? Where's my atlas? Or are the New Hebrides in a poem by Keats? Are they stars? I didn't know they really existed! Imagine my child in a place like that!)

"I am only here temporarily," the letter goes on, "waiting for transportation to my destination. This is a beautiful place. The jungle flowers and vegetation are gorgeous. There are nice beaches and a cool breeze all day. It's like spring or autumn at home."

"I am the first WAC who has ever been on this island and I have really been feted. The captain has been driving me everywhere in his jeep. It has been wonderful. But let me go back to the beginning of my trip."

"I left San Francisco the day after I talked to you long distance. I was the only woman to leave our camp for the ship and I was terrified that I would be alone."

"But, to my delight, I was put in a cabin with two Navy nurses. We were the only three women so you can imagine we were not forgotten. We really were awfully spoiled. Marvelous accommodations. Hot and cold running soft water constantly. . . . three meals a day. . . . most unusual on troop ships which generally serve only two meals. In addition the steward brought us our breakfast." (Home is not like this!)

"Our ship was swell. The trip was uneventful as far as the enemy was concerned. But we did have a destroyer escort part of the way. A ship had been sunk two days before in the route we were following." (Heaven help me—why didn't I keep her home! Letting her go into such danger when she didn't HAVE to go.)

"Actually, mother, the trip was like a pleasure cruise. Every four days we had an aged movie in the evening. Much of the rest of the time I played bridge. And I ended way ahead."

"The captain and the crew were wonderful to us. They sort of mothered us. The first night out of Frisco was really rough and we had to catch our suit cases and bureau drawers as they raced across the cabin. But after that the sea was smooth."

"What fun we had in the initiation on crossing the equator! They didn't shave our heads or make us eat garbage. But we had to do plenty that was silly. We had to wear our skirts backwards for two days and paint our faces with big red crosses. We had to stand many watches on deck looking out to sea through spy glasses made of two coke bottles held together with tape."

"I spent most of my time on the ship with a group of Navy fliers. A grand bunch. It was awfully hard to say 'goodby' to them. Two of them said they were going to fly down and see me. They may not be able to arrange that. Besides I think it was the moonlight and the sea and the closeness of war that made them feel sort of romantic. I am staying at the Army nurses' quarters on the island. They are nice, though a little primitive. The Sanitation Corps has cleaned out all malaria. So don't worry about that."

"Do you want to hear about what happened when we first heard of the invasion? We were at the Officers' club on this island after dinner. About 30 of us. I was the only woman."

"Some one came rushing in and shouted 'the invasion has begun!' We hardly believed it. So we hurried off to the nearest radio, tuned in on San Francisco and heard the announcements. It was really exciting. We huddled around the radio. You should have seen the faces of the men."

"One of the men was the French delegate here. When the radio report was ended we stood up and sang 'The Marseillaise' to him. Everyone was crying a little."

"I shall never forget that moment."

"All my love and don't forget me." (Forget you! I wish I were 20 years younger! I'd be tagging along, too!)

Before broiling fish, dip it into a salt solution of two tablespoons salt to one cup of water. Let stand five minutes for the slices of fish, five to eight for thick slices; drain. Place on greased broiler, brush with oil, and broil under moderate heat until nicely browned and cooked through. Only one turning should be necessary. Ten to 12 or 15 minutes is sufficient for the average size fish. In pan frying, the same procedure is followed.

Mrs. Leona Henn has received a letter from Private Richard G. Henn that was dated June 20. The letter is as follows: "Just a few lines to let you know that I am still O. K. I am still on the front line, but it is a lot more quiet than it has been."

"I get my mail right here on the front, so keep on writing, even if I don't write so often."

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Swackhammer, of Laureville, have heard from their son, Francis (Buddy) Swackhammer, a member of a parachute troop unit. This was the first direct communication since his correspondence ended abruptly October 15, 1943. Alarmed at the lack of letters from their son, Mr. and Mrs. Swackhammer had appealed to Congressman Walter Brehm to get some information concerning his whereabouts and well-being. Congressman Brehm recently wrote them, giving their son's new address, and assuring them that on April 30, 1944, he was all right, but that his exact whereabouts could not be divulged as he was on a secret assignment.

The letter just received by his parents was undated and gave no hint of where he was stationed. It read in part: "I am sorry you have not been getting any of my letters. I received several from you yesterday. Some of them were pretty old. I am quite all right and feeling pretty good. They have been working us, but it isn't too bad. I wish you could see where I am staying right now. Our living conditions couldn't be much better in the army. The way things are going, it shouldn't be much longer until this will end over here. I have been ready for quite some time to go back to the states."

PLANNING THE PEACE
THERE are many indications of a German crack-up. It may not come this month or this summer, but it cannot be very long delayed. The Nazis are now assailed powerfully on three fronts—Italy, Normandy and Russia—of which the last is most powerful. There is also what might be called a fourth front—the never-ending assault from the Allied air forces.
The imminence of Nazi collapse arouses many problems which should be studied by civilians no less than by experts. What is to be done with the Germans this time when they have surrendered? They will be disarmed and rendered incapable of harm for many years to come—that may be assumed. But what of penalties for the vast damage they have inflicted on a civilized world? What of amends and restoration? What shall be the nature of the controls imposed? Then the Japanese—what is to be done with them? and what rules and penalties shall be adopted by the civilized world to guarantee general peace hereafter?
The military men are winning the war, and the statesmen are busily engaged in shaping the ensuing peace, but neither of these groups can solve the problem alone. It is time for mass-thinking everywhere by intelligent men and women.

TWENTY-FOUR-HOUR WEEK
A work week of only 24 hours is envisioned by Gustave Dahlberg, manufacturer of insulating and building materials. He developed this idea the other day to the American Society of Planning Officials, and expects to repeat it at a Senate hearing later.
The leisure involved in working only eight hours, three days a week, means, according to Dahlberg, more time at home, with consequent demands for better housing. This in turn would boom the building industry and American business generally.
A 24-hour week seems remote just now, when the common 40-hour week has been stepped up to 48, and overtime work is usual. Even when the war ends, it will not come all at once, if ever. A great deal of concentrated production would be a prerequisite and a necessary concomitant. Still, our ancestors would never have expected the world to see anything short of a 12-hour day. You never can tell.
What is so conventional as a political convention?

WASHINGTON Report
A WAC Writes Letter To Columnist Mother
Tells of Pacific Trip And Dangers of the Sea
By HELEN ESSARY
Central Press Columnist
WASHINGTON—I hope she won't be too cross with me for giving you her letter. It will help the cause nearest her heart—WAC recruiting. And, besides, I promise never to do it again. The letter came when I was half sick with worry and regret that I had let my young daughter go off alone into an unknown world.
Here is some of what she wrote me:
"Dearest Mother: Well, I'm finally on dry land but still remember the rocking rhythm of the ship. I am temporarily in the New Hebrides islands." (Motherly query—where in the universe are the New Hebrides? Where's my atlas? Or are the New Hebrides in a poem by Keats? Are they stars? I didn't know they really existed! Imagine my child in a place like that!)
"I am only here temporarily," the letter goes on, "waiting for transportation to my destination. This is a beautiful place. The jungle flowers and vegetation are gorgeous. There are nice beaches and a cool breeze all day. It's like spring or autumn at home."
"I am the first WAC who has ever been on this island and I have really been feted. The captain has been driving me everywhere in his jeep. It has been wonderful. But let me go back to the beginning of my trip."
"I left San Francisco the day after I talked to you long distance. I was the only woman to leave our camp for the ship and I was terrified that I would be alone."
"But, to my delight, I was put in a cabin with two Navy nurses. We were the only three women so you can imagine we were not forgotten. We really were awfully spoiled. Marvelous accommodations. Hot and cold running soft water constantly . . . three meals a day . . . most unusual on troop ships which generally serve only two meals. In addition the steward brought us our breakfast." (Home is not like this!)

The WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND
By DREW PEARSON

WASHINGTON—It hasn't leaked out yet, but hard-working Chester Bowles, the man who made OPA as popular as it could be, has written a letter to the White House asking the President to relieve him of his job.
He has told FDR that Connecticut political leaders have offered him the Democratic nomination for Governor and that he has to give them a decision within the next 30 days.
Bowles, in his usual tactful manner, also laid down some tough conditions for the President to take if he remains on at the head of the OPA. He specified that he would continue on the job only if he was put in charge of all demobilization after the war including the thorny post of disposing of surplus materials.
The President, who likes the job Bowles has done, probably would be delighted to pass demobilization on to him. However, Justice Jimmy Byrnes has put his close friend Will Clayton in this key post and wants to keep him.
Not long ago when Clayton tendered his resignation over the Texas political rebellion and the part his Texas business associates played in it, Justice Byrnes flatly refused to accept it.
With more tact than Leon Henderson and almost as much courage Bowles has held the price line pretty well and made people understand—if not like—rationing.

BLUE GRASS PROTECTORESS
The part which the vivacious first lady of Kentucky is playing in the affairs of the state is causing more and more political gossip in the Blue Grass country.
The other day distinguished Congressman John Robinson, long the one leading Republican from Kentucky, visited new Republican Governor Simeon Willis with a group of other Republicans. Graciously, Mrs. Willis invited them for dinner, sat with them during a delicious repast.
But after dinner, when the men usually are left to their cigars and bourbon, Mrs. Willis lingered on.
Glances were cast in her direction. Feet shifted. The visiting GOP leaders had intimate political matters to discuss, and were accustomed to talking without ladies present.
Finally Governor Willis' secretary, Ralph Homan, decided to be tactful. He rose and said to the first lady:
"Mrs. Willis, I guess it's about time for you and me to leave so these gentlemen can get down to business."
"You can leave if you want to Ralph," she said, "but I'm going to stay and protect Sim."
SMOKE-FILLED MANEUVERING
Wounds now appear pretty well healed between the Dewey-Bricker camps, but for a time at Chicago those who saw what went on behind the scenes thought that clashing views and personalities never would be reconciled.
It is, of course, nothing new for Presidential and Vice-Presidential candidates to row. Willkie and his running mate, the late Senator McNary, never got enthusiastic about each other. Roosevelt and Garner frequently were at swords' points. Coolidge and Dawes were almost openly bitter, while Hoover and Charlie Curtis (Continued on Page Eight)

MEDICAL advance does not consist alone in such an event as a great scientific discovery and its application to a hitherto unquenched disease. There are little skirmishes as well as great battles won against the enemy and sometimes a succession of these little advancements is made in one field over a long period of time so that when the smoke lifts for a moment we find we have really accomplished much more than we supposed.
Dr. Clendening will answer questions of general interest only, and then only through his column.
The only way to stop it is to close the highway. And that is what sclerosing the veins does, and that is what the modern treatment of varicose veins is. The sclerosing is done with a solution injected into the vein which completely destroys the lining and makes the vein shrivel and grow into a fibrous cord.
The little by little improvements that have been made in this procedure consist mostly in devising of better and better and less and less painful and dangerous sclerosing agents. During recent years organic soapy solutions have almost entirely replaced other sclerosing agents in the treatment of varicose veins.
Possibly the greatest help in the application of these newer methods from the patient's standpoint is that he doesn't have to go to bed. The tests to determine whether a given case is suitable for injection treatments and also the treatments themselves are given in the doctor's office and do not interrupt the patient's work.
The small superficial varicosities that occur mostly in women who have borne children do not need treatment imperatively, but can be sclerosed if desired for cosmetic purposes.

Q. My girl three and a half years old is so stubborn that no punishment will make her do what she does not want to do.
A. Why use punishment at this age to get her to do what you want her to do? Limit punishment to keeping her from doing a few things she must never do. This distinction is given quite at length in my bulletin, "Stubbornness," to be had by writing me in care of this paper enclosing a self-addressed envelope with a three-cent stamp on it.

"CALAMITY TOWN" by ELLERY QUEEN
CHAPTER FORTY
"Rosemary was meant to be murdered," repeated Pat slowly, as if the words were in a language she didn't understand.
"But Queen—" protested Bradford.
"I know, I know," sighed Ellery. "It raises tremendous difficulties and objections. But with Nora eliminated as the intended victim, it's the only logical explanation for the crime. So we've got to accept it as our new premise. Rosemary was meant to be murdered. Immediately I asked myself: Did the three letters have anything to do with Rosemary's death?
"Superficially, no. The letters referred to the death of Jim's wife."
"And Rosemary was Jim's sister," said Pat with a frown.
"Yes, and besides, Rosemary had shown no signs of the illnesses predicted for Thanksgiving Day and Christmas Day. Moreover, since the three letters can now be interpreted as two or three years old or more, they no longer appear necessarily criminal. They can merely refer to the natural death of a previous wife of Jim's—not Nora, but a first wife whom Jim married in New York and who died there some New Year's Day between the time Jim ran out on Nora and the time he came back to marry her."
"But Jim never said anything about a first wife," objected Pat.
"That wouldn't prove he hadn't had one," said Cart.
"No," nodded Ellery. "So it all might have been perfectly innocent. Except for two highly significant and suspicious factors: first, that the letters were written but never mailed, as if no death had occurred in New York; and second, that a woman did actually die in Wrightsville on New Year's Day of 1941, as written by Jim in his third and last letter a long time before it happened. Coincidence?
"No, I saw that there must be some connection between Rosemary's death and the three letters Jim wrote."
Ellery paused a second or two before posing this problem: "What connection is possible between Rosemary Haight's death and the three letters Jim Haight wrote long, long before?
"And with this question, we come to the heart of the problem. For with Rosemary the intended victim all along, the use of the three letters can be interpreted as a blind, a clever deception, a psychological smoke-screen to conceal the truth from the authorities! Isn't that what happened?
"Didn't you and Chief Dakin, Bradford, instantly dismiss Rosemary's death as a factor and concentrate on Nora as the intended victim? But that was just what Rosemary's murderer would want you to do! You ignored the actual victim to look for murder motives against the ostensible victim. And so you built your case around Jim, who was the only person who could possibly have poisoned Nora, and never for an instant sought the real criminal—the person with the motive and opportunity to poison Rosemary."
Pat was by now so bewildered that she gave herself up wholly to listening. But Cart Bradford was following with a savage intensity, hunched over the table and never taking his eyes from Ellery's face.
"Go on!" he said. "Go on!"
"Let's go back," said Mr. Queen, lighting a cigaret. "We now know Jim's three letters referred to a hidden, a never-mentioned first wife. If this woman died on New Year's Day two or three years ago, why didn't Jim mail the letters to his sister? More important than that, why didn't he disclose the fact to you or Chief Dakin when he was arrested? Why didn't Jim tell Judge Martin, his attorney, that the letters didn't mean Nora, for as a possible defense in his trial? For if the first wife were dead, it would have been a simple matter to corroborate—the attending physician's affidavit, the death certificate, a dozen things."
"But Jim kept his mouth shut. He didn't by so much as a word indicate that he'd married another woman between the time he and Nora broke up almost four years ago and the time he returned to Wrightsville to marry her. Why? Why Jim's mysterious silence on this point?"
"Maybe," said Pat with a shiver, "because he'd actually planned and carried out the murder of his first wife."
"Then why didn't he mail the letters to his sister?" argued Cart. "Since he'd presumably written them for that eventuality."
"Ah," said Mr. Queen. "The very counterpoint? So I said to myself: Is it possible that the murder Jim had planned of his first wife did not take place at the time it was supposed to?"
"You mean she was alive when Jim came back to Wrightsville?" gasped Pat.
"Not merely alive," said Mr. Queen; he slowly ground out the butt of his cigaret in an ash tray. "She followed Jim here."
"The first wife?" Carter gaped. "She came to Wrightsville?"
"Yes, but not as Jim's first wife."
"Then how?"
"She came to Wrightsville," said Ellery, "as Jim's sister."
"As Jim's sister?" whispered Pat. "The woman Jim introduced to us as his sister Rosemary wasn't his sister at all? She was his wife?"
"Yes," Ellery motioned to Gus Olsen. But Gus had the second round ready. And no one spoke until Gus returned to the bar.
"But Queen," queried Carter, dazed, "how can you know that?"
"Well, whose word have we that the woman who called herself Rosemary Haight was Jim Haight's sister?" demanded Ellery. "Only the word of Jim and Rosemary, and they're both dead . . . However, that's not how I know she was his first wife. I know that because I know who really killed her. And knowing who really killed her, it just isn't possible for Rosemary to have been Jim's sister. The only person she could have been, the only person against whom the murderer had motive, was Jim's first wife; as you'll see."
"But Ellery," said Pat, "didn't you tell me yourself that day, by comparing the woman's handwriting on Steve's trucking receipt with the handwriting on the flap of the letter Jim received from 'Rosemary Haight,' that that proved the woman was Jim's sister?"
"I was wrong," said Mr. Queen, frowning. "All that the two signatures proved, really, was that the same woman had written both. That meant only that the woman who showed up here was the same woman who wrote Jim that letter which disturbed him so. I was misled by the fact that on the envelope she had signed the name 'Rosemary Haight.' Well, she was just using that name."
"But if the woman who was poisoned was Jim's first wife," protested Carter, "why didn't Jim's real sister come forward after the murder? Lord knows the case had enough publicity!"
"If he had a sister," mumbled Patty. "If he had one!"

Private Henn is attached to the Airborne Glider Infantry as a messenger and has been stationed somewhere in England.

Sgt. Andrew W. Goeller, who is stationed with the Army Air Corps somewhere in England, wishes to thank his friends for the many lovely birthday cards which he received recently.

Sgt. Goeller had the privilege of visiting for a couple of days with his brother, Corporal Donald Goeller, also stationed in England. The brothers had not been together for almost two years. They reported that they surely had a lot to talk about, and since Sgt. Goeller had been in England for more than a year, he had a lot of interesting stories to tell his brother.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Swackhammer, of Laurelville, have heard from their son, Francis (Buddy) Swackhammer, a member of a parachute troop unit. This was the first direct communication since his correspondence ended abruptly October 15, 1943. Alarmed at the lack of letters from their son, Mr. and Mrs. Swackhammer had appealed to Congressman Walter Brehm to get some information concerning his whereabouts and well-being. Congressman Brehm recently wrote them, giving their son's new address, and assuring them that on April 30, 1944, he was all right, but that his exact whereabouts could not be divulged as he was on a secret assignment.

The letter just received by his parents was undated and gave no hint of where he was stationed. It read in part: "I am sorry you have not been getting any of my letters. I received several from you yesterday. Some of them were pretty old. I am quite all right and feeling pretty good. They have been working us, but it isn't too bad. I wish you could see where I am staying right now. Our living conditions couldn't be much better in the army. The way things are going, it shouldn't be much longer until this will end over here. I have been ready for quite some time to go back to the states."

Pickaway County Money Moves Into War On Nazis and Japs

COMMISSIONER S MOVE TO BUY $50,000 BONDS

Sale Heavy For Premiere
Showing At The Grand
Thursday Night

Pickaway county tax money has moved to the aid of our men in the service and against the Axis. Robert G. Colville, county treasurer, advised the War Finance Committee that the commissioners of Pickaway county have approved the purchase of $50,000 of seven-eighth percent certificates of indebtedness during the Fifth War Loan drive.

The investment is for the purpose of employing funds of the county which are not immediately needed and to provide an interest income for the county. The purchase is allocated to each of the political subdivisions of the county on the basis of real estate taxes paid by them.

This action, Clark Will of the war finance committee says, is helpful in enabling the committee to meet its quota of corporations and organizations for the Fifth War Loan drive.

"Have you secured your tag that will admit you to the premiere performance of 'Follow the Boys' at the Grand Theatre Thursday night?" bond salesmen are asking. The show starts promptly at 8:30 p. m. and features Ted Lewis and his band of entertainers. Persons buying a bond between July 1 and July 6 are entitled to a tag providing free admission.

Frank Suss, chairman of publicity and activities for the drive in Circleville is anxious that as many persons as possible attend the showing of the premiere. He says the picture is worthy of a large audience. It not only features Ted Lewis and his band, but offers a great cast including George Raft, Zorina, Charles Grapewin, Grace McDonald, Charles Butterworth, Jeanette MacDonald, Marlene Dietrich, Dinah Shore, Donald O'Connor, Peggy Ryan and W. C. Fields. The sale has been heavy.

The county campaign committee reports that it is still short of its quota on the sale of Series E bonds and other issues to individuals and is in hopes that the showing of the picture will put it over the quota. Bonds that are for sale to individuals are readily marketable.

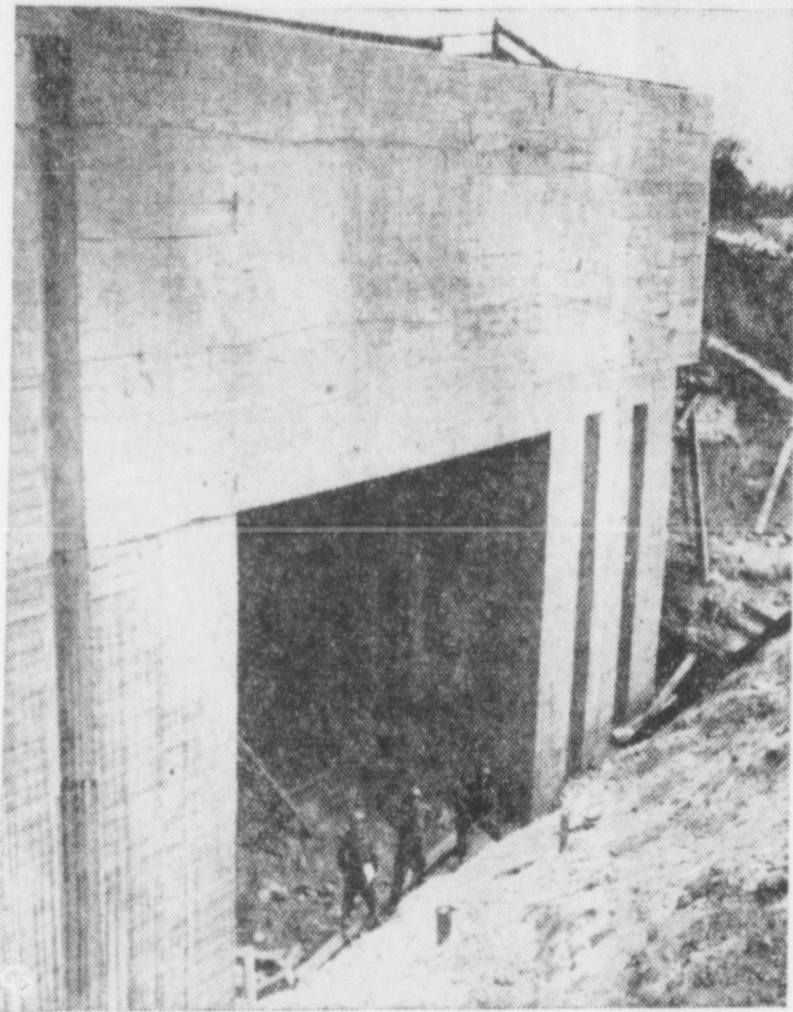

Saturday's sales of Series E bonds in the booths on the streets by members of the Business and Professional Women's club were gratifying according to a report by T. O. Gilliland. Sales in the stores on Monday, the eve of Independence Day, was exceptionally good, too, he said.

COUNTY YOUTH HELD PRISONER IN NAZI CAMP

Charles Carmean, Jr., is a prisoner of war in Germany, a letter received Friday from the youth informed his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Carmean, Sr., of near Williamsport. The letter was written April 2 from the German prison camp and stated that he had been wounded in the left hip before he was taken prisoner, but that he is getting along nicely and is feeling fine, and expects to be able to leave the camp hospital within a few days.

A notice from the War Department in February announced to his parents that he was missing in action, but no further word had been received by them.

Another letter, written April 25, was also received from Private Carmean Monday in which he asked his parents to send him some needed supplies through the Red Cross.

The youth, a graduate of the Williamsport high school, was engaged with his father in farming before entering the service.

were at opposite poles, both politically and personally.

So the inside story of what happened at Chicago is not so surprising. Anyway, here it is:

The smoke-filled room in this case was No. 2519 at the Stevens hotel, occupied by the Dewey hierarchy—Buffalo's Ed Jaekle, Long Island's Russ Sprague and Wall Street's Herbert Brownell. As their carefully oiled steam roller gathered more and more momentum, they sent ex-Senator Townsend of Delaware (a Du Pont man) to Bricker Monday night. It was Townsend's job to try to persuade Bricker to withdraw, in order to keep the appearance of party harmony and make Dewey's nomination unanimous.

Bricker, however, bridled, asked Townsend who he was talking for. "I'm talking for Dewey," replied the ex-Delaware Senator.

"If that little—has anything to say," shot back Bricker, "let him call me himself."

Townsend reported back to the smoke-filled room at 2519. Dewey Boss Ed Jaekle then phoned Bricker, asked him if he would accept the Vice Presidency. Bricker and Roy Moore, his manager, in effect told him to go to hell. But by next morning, Tuesday, the Dewey boys were worried. Defeatism was rampant throughout the convention. Midwest delegates were up in arms. Revolt was growing. There was even talk of a last-minute rebellion against Dewey when the nominations began next day. Bricker's friends naturally made no effort to conceal Dewey's high-handed tactics to whip the convention into line.

At midnight Tuesday, the Dewey boys again approached Bricker about withdrawing in favor of the Vice Presidency. But again Bricker said no. His name would go before the convention for President, he said, no matter what happened.

THREE-HOUR HUDDLE DOES IT

At this point Ed Jaekle had his press aide, Harold Keller, round up a hurried press conference. It was so hurried that scarcely a dozen reporters were on hand when Jaekle announced that Dewey was willing to let the convention choose its own candidate. However, Jaekle was so nervous that without even being questioned, he volunteered the following:

"I think John Bricker would make a fine choice." Forty-five minutes later Roy Moore and two other Bricker leaders entered the corner backroom of the Dewey suite, began huddling with Jaekle, Sprague and Brownell. This was the big movement. For three hours the huddle continued at intervals. One of the men ran out of the room and into another for some quick private telephoning. The Dewey boys consulted constantly with Albany. Moore and his pals raced up and down the halls between the Bricker and Dewey suites.

It wasn't until 3:45 a. m. that Bricker, seated in his headquarters, finally agreed to be the vice presidential candidate. Back to the smoke-filled room on the twenty-fifth floor went Roy Moore. Hands were shaken and weary maneuverers dozed off for a few hours' sleep.

Many of the Bricker crowd was thoroughly flabbergasted next morning when they heard of their hero's decision. Even after he withdrew from the race at the convention stadium, shouts of "We want Bricker" poured through the hall.

JOHN SABINE GAINS PRAISE FOR WAR ROLE

Sergeant John W. Sabine, 20, former Circleville high school football star, is now an armament crew chief with the United States Army's Eighth Air Force somewhere in England, and has an excellent record as an armorer. A letter from the English fighter station quotes Johnny as saying that "it would be tough flying a Mustang fighter bomber on invasion missions if its guns were not in top condition and correctly loaded." He also says "the P-51 is the best ship I've ever worked on." The commanding officer says that the ammunition Johnny has loaded into his plane's guns has accounted for at least five Nazi aircraft.

Citizens of the south and east parts of Circleville will remember Johnny as an ace carrier of The Circleville Herald a few years ago. Before entering the service he was employed as a car inspector for the Pennsylvania Railroad at Columbus.

He is a son of Mrs. Laura Sabine, 420 East Union street.
